What's Motion Design?

Motion design animations offer a brief yet immersive experience that goes beyond mere data visualization to narrate a story. This form of content is highly shareable and has the potential to go viral, which could boost your brand's visibility. However, achieving engagement hinges on the quality of the animated scenarios, which is crucial to the production process.

Through animation and visual effects, motion design principles help create the illusion of movement or rotation and is typically combined with audio for use in multimedia projects and video production. This dynamic field integrates elements of typography, graphic design, and video editing to convey messages, tell stories, or create aesthetic or emotional impact.

With motion design, your most complex ideas and narratives can be made more accessible and engaging for customers, making it a powerful tool in marketing, educational content, entertainment, and user interface design.

Understanding the Motion Design Process

Motion design? graphic animation? These terms often get mixed up, but to get technical, motion design is a type of animation. At its core, it represents the blending of graphic design with animation techniques. To build a motion design video animation, we need to establish a set of guidelines that ensure consistency and quality in the visual elements used in your projects. Here are some items to consider when creating a motion design guideline:

- Define your brand identity: Start by understanding your brand's personality, values, and visual identity. It will be the foundation for your motion design guideline. Consider factors such as color palette, typography, and overall style.
- Identify your target audience: Understand who your target audience is and what their preferences and expectations are when it comes to motion design. This will help you tailor your guideline to meet their needs effectively.
- Define your motion design objectives: Clearly define the purpose of your motion design, whether it's to engage, educate, entertain, or all the above. This will guide the overall direction and tone of your motion design guideline.
- Establish design principles: Define a set of design principles that will govern your motion design, which include concepts like simplicity, consistency, smoothness, and clarity. Consider how they align with your brand identity.
- Define animation techniques: Specify the animation techniques that will be used consistently across your projects, which includes aspects like timing, easing, transitions, and effects. Provide examples and guidelines for each technique to ensure consistency.
- Create a visual language: Develop a visual language, including style, iconography, and graphical elements. It helps create a cohesive and recognizable brand identity. Consider how these visual elements will work together with your brand's overall design language.
- Document Technical Specifications: Outline technical requirements and specifications for motion design in your projects. This may include details like aspect ratios, file formats, frame rates, and resolution of the devices where the content will be displayed.
- Provide Examples and Case Studies: Include a range of examples and case studies to demonstrate how your motion design guidelines can be applied in different contexts. These help designers understand how to apply the guidelines effectively.
- Collaboration and Feedback: Encourage feedback from your team members or stakeholders during the development of the motion design guideline. This ensures that multiple perspectives are considered.
- Update and evolve: Motion design trends and technologies change over time, so be prepared to update, and evolve your motion design guideline accordingly. Regularly review and refine your guidelines

Key Phases to Succeed with your Motion Design Project

The creative brief (specifications)

1

The brief is a clear go-to guide that presents all the crucial details to fully understand the project and your needs. It lays the groundwork for your motion design. Without a good brief, you're signing up for wasted time on all the steps that come after. A solid brief should contain:

- The Goal: What is the purpose of the motion design video animation?
- The Length: How long (min & max) should the motion design be?
- The Formats: What aspect ratios and file type do you require?
- The Target: Who do you want to reach? Depending on your audience – such as employees, prospects, customers, marketing managers or bank employees – the form and tone will be different.
- The Brand Identity: For consistency, it should contain all the written and visual elements you have, providing information on your positioning, values, vision, and graphic universe.

The Script

2

Creating the script is the first step in producing a motion design. Think of it as the backbone of your video: It is what the voice-over will say, or the words that will get written in subtitles. Getting the script spot-on is key, so make sure you nail it down and approve it with your team before moving on. A good script should:

- Respect the planned duration of your motion design
- Respect the desired tone and form
- Deliver the right message, depending on the goal of the animation
- Indicate the video animation style (flat design, isometric, gradient, or 3D animation).

The Storyboard

3

The storyboard is the visual interpretation of the script and might be created by an Art Director, or by the Motion Designer directly. This PDF document outlines the various screens (mocked up images) of the motion design, allowing you to proceed to the animation stage with confidence. A great storyboard should:

- Be precise enough, to avoid any revisions after the content animation process is on-going. Otherwise, we will have to redo from scratch.
- Include the script sentences next to each associated screen.
- Provide as much detail as possible about how the screens are animated, and the transitions between them.

If you have done your work right, you should end up with something you are proud of and have learned a thing or two along the way. Overwhelmed? No problem! everense has got your back on your Motion Design project. We do more than just animate; we are here to support the entire creative process. From fleshing out your ideas to creating standout animations that fit your brand and boost your marketing videos, our team is ready to bring any style of dream animation to life and elevate your video marketing game!

Make it Happen: How do we do it?

We can definitely help you create a motion design video animation, and the process is pretty straight forward, kind of...

To get the most out of your story, we need a few things to get started.

First and foremost, we sit down with your team over a digital coffee to UNDERSTAND YOUR NEEDS.

At the same time, we also need a script. That means how you want your story to be told, organized, and shaped. This is where our copywriter comes in, working their magic with words.

After their work is done, it's time for a creative journey through art direction.

Your story will now take the form of a storyboard. This is where our creativity pops up, screen by screen. This is where talented creators SHAPE THE LOOK AND FEEL of your story.

Then, it's time for a critical phase, voice overing, where a carefully selected voice actor will give the script the emotion it deserves.

Then we get to the beating heart of motion design... THE WOOW EFFECT!

We're talking about ANIMATION, where the animator brings all the elements together, to motion, to life.

They do this by blending artistic techniques, certain tricks, and special effects – even some code – to make the story flow smoothly right before your eyes.

The icing on the cake is the sound design. This is where gifted audio masters add real dynamism and effect through sound, whispering sweet nothings into your ears.

Still with us? Just one step left!

Calculation and export. This is when we can sit back, relax, and enjoy the show as our computers do the heavy lifting.

Finally, YOUR STORY IS READY TO BE WATCHED and enjoyed by all. You're welcome! As you can see (and hear), motion design is not just a "one click" kind of thing.

It is a race through time itself. Though, in the words of Einstein, time is relative.

Work with us!

We believe in who we are, we are passionate about what we do, we are driven by what is different, creative, and fresh. We generate innovative ideas and produce impactful motion design video productions, applying our experience and drawing inspiration from trends.
